Stephen Powell, 19, was shot to death around the end of the Pink Saturday festival, the street party that draws thousands of people to the Castro neighborhood the night before the LGBT Pride Parade each year. (Powell doesn't appear to have been gay himself.)

Despite the many people who were in the vicinity and may have witnessed the shooting, no one has been arrested in the case.

"We've exhausted every lead we've been given," investigators said. "We got very little help from the public, considering the size of the event."

Powell's death "could be easily solved if the people that witnessed it would just tell the truth," said inspectors. There are people who witnessed what happened, he said, who know the shooter or may even have cell phone photo's or video of the incident but "they're not telling everything they saw, and everything they know."

If you were in the vicinity of the Chevron gas station at the time of the shooting and have photo's or video images, or if you witnessed the shooting, please contact police to help close this case.
